That IRRESISTIBLE PERSONALITY!

THE TROUBLE WITH wimmin, Beanie reflected unhappily, was that you badda like 'em! Especially Susan Jane Bailey! And the trouble with her was that she didn't even know Beanie was in town!

Moodily, he brushed the jacket of his navy blue suit before getting into it. The brush hit a small, bulky object in one of the pockets. Beanie fished for it, eyed it with no interest at all, and then, for want of a place to put it, threw it back into the pocket again. "What if my pocket does bulge!" he thought. "She won't notice me, anyhow!"

Straightening his tie, Beanie tried in vain to flatten the stubborn cowlick of hair that crowned his head. Neither water nor hair tonic nor the application of a stiff brush, however, could subdue that determined lock of hair, which sprang right up again after having been laid low.

"Phooey!" said Beanie, regarding the final dressed-up effect in the mirror. "Double-phooey!"

This, you will admit, was hardly the way to feel before going to a party, but Beanie's discouragement was deep. All his hair-brushing, clothes-brushing, shoe-brushing and uncertainty about which tie to wear would be lost on the only girl in the world for him...Susan Jane Bailey!

The party confirmed Beanie's unhappiest expectations. Everyone was there, having a swell time, and so was she! Every time Beanie looked at her, her black ringlets shining, her wide, gray eyes laughing, her blue taffeta dress shimmering, he gulped. Three times he had started towards her, determined to say something that would make her notice him, and three times, his throat had filled with a mighty gulp. It was just no use!

"Hey, Beanie," Ken yelled to him, "you're nearest the kitchen! Bring us a bottle...any kind, so long as it's empty! We're gonna play spin-the-bottle!"

The laughter of the gang at the hilarious idea of playing that kid game followed Beanie into the kitchen. He had no heart for such nonsense! It would never be his luck to spin the bottle and have it point at...her! Beanie stopped thinking suddenly! How could he think, when he was blinded and numbed by an inspiration?

Making sure the cap was on the coke bottle, he carried it into the living room. The gang was already seated in a circle on the floor. Seeming to select someone at random, Beanie thrust the bottle into Susan Jane's hand. "You spin!" he said.

Shyly, Susan Jane twirled the bottle...and around it went! Around, and around, and around...and then, when it stopped...

"It's Beanie!"

"Hley, ya lucky guy!"

"Go on, Susie, kiss 'im!"

Susan looked shy, but Beanie leaned forward...and kissed the girl of his dreams! "H'lo, Susie!" he said.

The gray eyes were wide with surprise. For the first time, Susan Jane was seeing Beanie! "H'lo," she said. "I...I think your cowlick's cute!"

Beanie's heart swelled with rapture. He knew for sure that Susan Jane would be his girl from then on...and gratefully, he touched the magnet that caused the bulge in his pocket. The magnet was shaped like a horse-shoe. "That sure means good luck!" Beanie thought happily.

HELEN SAT AT the window and stared out into the street. She had no idea that her mother was watching her and thinking with deep understanding, "Poor Helen! She's been at a loss ever since we moved to this town. Just doesn't seem to make friends easily...."

A wise mother sometimes doesn't say half the things she may be thinking. Aloud, Helen's mother said, "Why don't you run across and visit that nice girl next door, dear? She seems to want to be so friendly. And I'm sure..."

A look of scorn clouded Helen's face as she thought of "that nice girl next door". "Oh, mother, she's so... so...nothing! I mean she's cute-looking and smart and all that, but gosh! She's just not my type!"

"I should have thought she was very much your type, dear," mother remarked mildly. "She's your age, likes the things you do..."

Again that look of scorn on Helen's face. "But she's a baby!" Dreamily, Helen thought of the clannish little clique of girls that she so envied and wanted to join. Now, there was a set of friends to have! They were all a year or so older and soooo smooth!

"But they're...hard to get to know!" For the first time, Helen admitted to her mother what the real trouble was. "I've tried to talk to them, but...well, they just aren't interested in me! I guess it's because I'm not seventeen yet! And their clothes are stuooning, mother, and they always have perfect makeup and..."

"I see." Helen's mother appeared to be digesting the picture of this glamorous, but unattainable, set of girls. "And that's the kind of girl you'd like to be friendly with?"

"Of course!"

Mother's eyes twinkled, but her voice was perfectly serene as she made a suggestion. "Have you ever mentioned to these young ladies the fact that you have an unusually attractive brother in college? I mean, if you're at a loss for things to say to them, that might be an ice-breaker!"

Funny, how right mothers can be sometimes! That very afternoon, Helen casually mentioned the existence of brother Bob in his senior year at college. To make matters more interesting, she produced a picture of him, looking very tall and handsome in his football togs.

Cecile, who had pitch-black hair worn in a poodle cut, put her arm around Helen's shoulder and squealed, "Oh, isn't he cute? When's he coming home?"

Adelaide, whose page-boy was a golden shimmer, smiled at Helen for the first time and said, "Why don't you have lunch with me tomorrow?"

And Patty, who wore eye shadow all the time, suddenly remembered that she lived only three houses away from Helen. "We should get together more often!" she exclaimed.

With sudden clarity, Helen realized that she'd been accepted! She should have felt wonderful, but somehow, she didn't. "Thank you for all the invitations," she said, backing away. To herself, she added, "But I'm not going to accept them! You don't want me as a friend, all you want is to meet my handsome brother!"

That evening, Helen told her mother, "I'm going across to the house next door, and make friends! Real friends! And, mom... thanks!"
